Introduction

Where would we be without a support system in our lives? From the day we are born, our survival depends upon the support we receive to meet our physical, financial, emotional or spiritual needs.

For individuals who have special needs or family members and caregivers of children with special needs, family support provides a time to come together to share experiences, information and resources. We find ways to support each other while strengthening our own support system.

Parent Power is a collection of material designed to guide you through your journey of choosing a family support group or starting your own. In these pages, family support will be referenced as parent support, parent to parent, support network and family support network. Although some sources will be diagnosis specific, the information is suitable for any group.

Participating in a family support group is a little something you can do for yourself. It is not just another meeting or another obligation in your schedule. Give yourself, your family and your child this opportunity. You may be pleasantly surprised.

Best wishes to those of you who are interested in starting a family support group in your area. To all of you who have started a family support group or are participating and involved in the process of making your group a success, we extend a heartfelt “Bravo!” for your dedication.

Thank you to the parents and professionals who so generously shared their knowledge, resources and experiences with us.

What is Family Support and How Does it Fit Into Alabama's Early Intervention System?

What is Family Support?

Family support occurs when families with similar interests or concerns meet to share a sense of community and understanding.<sup>1</sup> Family support groups may be formed around any interest or concern as long as there are people who wish to get together to help each other out.<sup>2</sup> In our day-to-day lives, we may be uncertain where our child or our family unit best fits. A family support group can offer an environment wherein we are welcomed, belong and are accepted.

Many families of young children with disabilities benefit from a family support group and a network of related resources to help them access information pertinent to their child's disability and family circumstance. Parents want to know the best ways to help their child and family, how to be effective advocates, and how to collaborate with professionals.<sup>3</sup> Family support groups or parent groups may meet for a variety of reasons. Primarily, they offer families a place and means to share information, give and receive emotional support, and work as a team to address common concerns. These parent groups may also allow families the opportunity to speak in a unified voice to express their needs and goals.

Family support is a societal investment in the promotion of the positive things families want for their children. Research shows this support improves parenting skills and self-confidence, the desire to attain greater education, and better knowledge of child development. Family support is a set of beliefs and an approach to strengthening and empowering families and communities so that they can foster the optimal development of children, youth, and adult family members.<sup>4</sup> Remember, you know your child better than anyone, and your knowledge and experience are important.

What Support Groups Can Do

Now that we have some idea of what a family support group is, we should find out what it can do for us. Why would we want to become involved? The answer depends on what we need from others in similar situations and the impact such a group will have on our future.

Parent to Parent of Pennsylvania offers the following list of things support groups can do for families.

1. Provide a safe, non-judgmental, and confidential outlet for sharing with peers who have gone through similar experiences
2. Provide understanding and assurance for others in the group that they are not alone
3. Provide evidence that it is possible to feel better about dealing or coping with disabilities, and to develop positive attitudes about the future
4. Provide the opportunity for members to help each other through the sharing of knowledge and experiences
5. Provide ideas and avenues wherein members can begin to regain some control over their lives
6. Offer resources, speakers, information, and literature not readily available outside of the group
7. Provide the opportunity for the formation of new support relationships which may exist outside of the group framework<sup>5</sup>

What Support Groups Cannot Do

Some families may have unrealistic expectations or may not be emotionally ready to become involved in a family support group. Parent to Parent of Pennsylvania offers the following list of things a support group cannot do for families.

1. "Cure" people
2. Attempt or suggest therapeutic interventions
3. Diagnose, make psychiatric evaluations or recommend therapies or medications
4. Attempt to resolve conflictual or ambivalent emotions or feelings.
5. Address toxic issues<sup>6</sup>

Family Support and AEIS

In many ways, AEIS and family support groups are alike. Both help families meet the needs of their infants and toddlers by giving them a voice and encouraging their participation. Early intervention offers a system developed to identify and manage the priorities and concerns of eligible families for their children much like family support. Both AEIS and family support groups may inform families of local trainings and workshops of interest in the community.

Alabama's Early Intervention System (AEIS) provides coordinated services from many different state agencies and community-based service providers. These services are for infants and toddlers, from birth to 3 years, who are eligible because of special needs (developmental delays or diagnosed disabilities). The Alabama

Parent Power

Department of Rehabilitation Services (ADRS), Division of Early Intervention, coordinates Alabama's Early intervention System.

Each child eligible for AEIS (a 25% delay in one or more areas of development or have a diagnosed condition which has a high probability of resulting in developmental delay) has an Individualized Family Service Plan (IFSP). Developing this plan provides ongoing opportunities for families and practitioners to identify the family's resources, concerns, and priorities. A service coordinator uses the IFSP to work with the family and coordinate the services from all agencies until transition occurs at age 3 years, or until the child is no longer eligible for AEIS. Communication with the family allows the service coordinator the opportunity to discuss goals for and meeting the needs of the child.<sup>7</sup> Many families benefit from contact with families with children who have a similar condition or diagnosis. AEIS service providers are also instrumental in connecting parents to the family support they need in their community. As the number of eligible children and families participating in the early intervention system grows, the need for family support organizations increases.<sup>8</sup> Providing information to families about the national, state and local family support organizations helps address potential needs for contact with other families or other community resources.<sup>9</sup> Families who have concerns about their child's development, but are not eligible for AEIS, may be interested in or involved in family support groups in their area.

"By participating in workshops, conferences, and Early Intervention coordinating councils one begins to feel real support."

Marie Bird, grandparent

How Do I Start a Family Support Group?

Are You Sure About Starting a Family Support Group?

There are many reasons to start a family support group. There may not be a support group in your area to meet your family's needs or the needs of families in similar situations. You may know of an existing state or nationally organized group that would mentor and assist with starting a local chapter. You may also know of an early intervention program or interested professional who would help provide resources and assist you as you begin this journey.

You should start a support group if :

1. you have a sincere and genuine concern for people.
2. you are prepared for a long term commitment.
3. you can put your personal and religious beliefs on hold.
4. you don't need personal recognition for your efforts.
5. your personal reward come by seeing other people grow.

You should not start a support group if:

1. you have not successfully accomplished tasks required to integrate your own personal issues. It would be premature to start a group if you cannot serve as a role model in coping and adapting to issues.
2. you can't reserve significant time in your life to devote to the group and its administration. It takes an initial commitment to setup, organize, market the group and oversee it.
3. you don't have the understanding and cooperation of your family or significant others in your life.
4. you can't or don't want to share authority and responsibility. One person cannot handle the administration, facilitation and management of the group.<sup>10</sup>

Starting a family support group should be taken seriously. Be sure you have the time available and the emotional support of your family.

“I decided to start a support group because I live in a rural small town with very few special needs children and I wanted to be around other families like us. Being part of this group allows me to give back to the community. We’ve been so blessed by Joseph and our experiences with him have been positive 99% of the time. I would like to help provide that for other families.” Anne Cline, parent

“I started a support group with my church. It is a lot of work, but I always wanted to be around other families in the same situation as we are.” Ivy Pittman, parent

Where to Begin

Once you have made the decision to start a support group, contact at least two or three people who share your interest. Let this be your core group. This group will share the responsibilities involved in getting your support group up and running.

In making decisions about forming the support group, consider these questions:

1. What is the primary purpose of this group?
2. What schools, disabilities, age groups, and geographical areas would you cover?
3. Who would join this group?
4. How will you communicate with or reach other people?
5. What is the underlying philosophy of the members?
6. What are your goals for this year? Can you list them in order of importance?
7. When do you want to meet?
8. How often do you want to meet?
9. Where do you want to meet?
10. Who will lead the meetings?
11. Will you need to raise money and charge dues or solicit contributions?<sup>11</sup>

When you and your core group have discussed the answers to these eleven questions, you may be ready to consider the suggestions given below.

1. Ask the professionals who helped you with different aspects of your child’s disability if they know of other individuals that had similar experiences and

Alabama's Early Intervention System

Parent Power

- might be interested in joining your group.
2. Many cities have mental health associations which have a Self-Help Clearinghouse. These organizations can provide you with names of similar groups and often will help you start your own.
  3. Find out if there is a National Organization in your field of interest that will help you open a chapter in your area. They can often supply you with start-up guidelines and supplementary material that can be very helpful.
  4. Check the Community, Neighborhood, or Metropolitan sections of your newspaper for announcements of similar groups and their meetings. Contact a group leader and see if you can visit the group and see how it is run.
  5. Churches, synagogues, and other religious or spiritual organizations can often provide you with a location or speakers for your group as well as alert you to similar groups within their institution.
  6. Look in the Yellow Pages under social services for organizations you may wish to contact to let them know of your group.
  7. Go to the library and check out books on the subject. Many books will include a list of organizations and useful resources for you to contact or use as group material.
  8. Your local or regional psychological association can refer you to counselors who specialize in your area of interest and who might be willing to work with you in starting your group.
  9. Subscribe to newsletters offered by organizations in your field of interest. Newsletters are a good source of information that can determine who is prominent in your field and where to find seminars or lectures to broaden your knowledge.
  10. If you find a group with similar interests, call the group facilitator and ask if you can monitor the group and arrange a meeting to discuss ideas and concerns.<sup>12</sup>

Who Can Participate?

Deciding who may participate in your support group depends on the emphasis and size of group you want to start. Family support groups are often referred to as a parent groups. Both are group of parents, grandparents, aunts and uncles, siblings,

Parent Power

foster parents, primary caregivers, or anyone assisting in raising the child with a disability. These groups also often include members such as educators, medical professionals, social services people, policymakers, friends and others interested in the same issues.<sup>13</sup>

“I wish they would have more meetings just for grandparents and other family members to inform them about special needs.” Lisa Williams, parent

“We have created an informal forum in which bewildered new parents can just drop in and find a group who knows what they are going through, and we offer a resource for medical professionals because they may direct any of their patients to us who need our support. We strive to be a ‘very open’ group. We want to create an environment where people feel comfortable sharing whatever is on their mind.” Anne Cline, parent

The First Meeting

Once you have made the decision to start a group, organized a core group, found resources to support your purpose and decided who to invite, it is time to prepare for your first meeting. Some suggested guidelines to follow are:

1. Determine leadership. Who will conduct the first meeting? Will you have officers, will you elect a leader, appoint a leader and get group approval, or elect several officers?
2. Develop an agenda for the first meeting. You may want to start informally and offer participants a chance to get together and talk or you may want to devote the first meeting to organizational issues. Do you want to invite a guest speaker, show a video or combine the meeting with a social event? Be sure the agenda is specific, goal oriented, and short enough that you can comfortably get through all items listed.
3. Arrange for the place of the meeting. Pick a convenient location that can comfortably hold the maximum number of people you expect to attend. This does not have to be a permanent meeting place, but pick some place easy to find. Be sure this place is accessible to individuals with disabilities and has plenty of parking available.

Alabama's Early Intervention System

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

4. Invite guests to the meeting. Do you want to control who is coming to this meeting or open it up to the public by advertising? You may wish to post notices in places like early intervention programs, clinics, schools, doctors' offices, libraries, the recreation center or other locations where your prospective members might see them. The local newspaper may have a section that announces local meetings.<sup>14</sup>

To ensure a successful first meeting, you might:

1. get there early and be sure everything is set up as you want it.
2. be sure to put signs at the door directing people to the meeting room.
3. have a guest list for people to sign as they arrive. It is always helpful to have a mailing list of potential members. You may also consider using a membership form.
4. provide name tags. Guests may not know each other.
5. you may want to take a few minutes to have everyone give his/her name, age of child, disability of child, and/or school child attends.
6. introduce the leaders of the group or candidates for office and any community leaders or school officials in attendance.
7. don't rush, but keep the meeting moving.
8. set a time and place for the next meeting and identify possible topics or activities.
9. allow time for socializing and discussion. It is important for members to be able to talk to one another, but don't let this "take over" the meeting.
10. end on time.<sup>15</sup>

Maintaining A Group

Communication is very important in maintaining your group. After your first meeting, it is a good idea to send a memo, letter or e-mail to each participant to thank them for their effort to attend. Give them some information about the group such as how many families attended and the ages and disabilities of their children. Identify any professionals who may have attended, giving their agency or organization affiliation.

Alabama's Early Intervention System

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

Support group members appreciate being kept up to date. Sending correspondence will refresh their memory of decisions made during the meetings. Remember, involve others, give them responsibility, and use the strength of your volunteers.

As your group becomes more established, there may be other questions to consider such as:

1. what are your group's long-term goals?
2. what do your members want to learn more about?
3. do you want to offer or participate in training programs?
4. who will arrange for speakers or topics for the meetings?
5. who will contact members and advertise the meetings?
6. do you want people to be able to reach your group by phone?
7. whose number will they call?
8. do you need to provide child care at the meetings?
9. how will you pay for this?
10. do you want to start and send out a newsletter?
11. who will write it? type it? mail it?
12. how will you pay for the newsletter and postage?
13. will this work be done on a volunteer basis or will someone need to be hired?
14. how much money do you think you'll need to carry out your plans?
15. do you plan to raise money and/or apply for funds?
16. will you need to make this a formal organization?
17. will you need to write by-laws?
18. do you need to apply to the IRS for tax exempt status? Do you need an auditor?
19. do you have someone with experience in organizing nonprofit groups to help formalize your group?<sup>16</sup>

The numbers of parents who attend your group will fluctuate over time.<sup>17</sup> Don't confuse interest or effectiveness with numbers. Announced topics of discussion may only attract a small audience, but may be of great interest and importance to those people. In general, more people will plan to attend than actually get there, especially when infants and toddlers are part of the family. Large attendance is not the key to success. Some people join groups for reasons other than attending all the meetings. They may join to receive a newsletter, to be a part of a group that is working for the benefit of their child or to attend only one or two meetings of special interest.<sup>18</sup> As the needs of the members in your group will change over time, the group should be able to change to meet the new circumstances. Some parents will attend the group for a short period or sporadically while coping with particularly stressful life events. Others will attend faithfully as long as the group lasts. However, if too many parents are leaving the group, you need to determine why.<sup>19</sup>

Parent Power

Keeping a group going requires a lot of time, work, energy, and sometimes money. It is often harder to keep a parent support group alive and energized than to start a new one.

These suggestions will help to keep your parent support group alive and well.

1. Get a new focus.
2. Take on a special project that has long been needed.
3. Continue to have regular meetings.
4. Have an open door policy.
5. Function democratically – not as a social club.
6. Have an active membership committee.
7. Stay abreast and up to date on all action by local bureaucracies.
8. Keep the press informed of all important activities.
9. Don't become a "paper organization."
10. Don't become just a fund raising group.
11. Don't let your parent support group become just a gripe group.
12. Remember the purpose of your group.
13. Share the glory that comes to your parent support group.
14. Communicate with your membership on a continual basis.
15. Keep your members involved.<sup>20</sup>

Financing a Group

Many community facilities are willing to offer meeting location options for your group. Some may even provide refreshments. There are groups that are run entirely by volunteers and have no income other than possible membership dues.<sup>21</sup> Many groups may continue to meet without financial support. However, the time may come when your group may consider adding special projects, a newsletter, a brochure, or inviting speakers who require financial support. Some qualified members of the group may wish to volunteer their time to participate on a financial committee or your group might consider paying someone to take care of the financial arrangements. Research any options of funding available to your group such as federal, state and local grants, philanthropic or private sector donations or community fund raisers. Have a purpose for the funds, but keep in mind that core functions may not be supported by short-term funding.

Alabama's Early Intervention System

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

“Our one source of income is the Buddy Walk. It is an annual, nation-wide walk sponsored by the National Down Syndrome Society. We have corporate sponsors and individual, group or family sponsors. We set a budget for the year. If we make more than our budget through our Buddy Walk, we set some aside. Our expenses for each year are an administrative cost, setting aside funds to establish an Adult Down Syndrome Clinic, funding support to send physicians to workshops or trainings for adult Down syndrome care, media expenses for our Buddy Walk, outreach in the community, educational and advocacy meetings for parents and teachers, a quarterly newsletter, and maintaining a phone tree using Calling Post.”

Kara Bishop, parent, treasurer for PADS

What are the Features of a Good Support Group?

What Do I Look For?

Whether you are starting a support group or thinking about joining one, consider leadership, program quality and sustainability as necessary for a successful group. All groups need leadership, whether it is shared or rotated by vote as a group of officers. Good leaders are skillful in organizing, facilitating, and problem-solving. Pay attention to details such as the meeting location and accessibility, the agenda of the group, short-term and long-term goals that meet the needs of the group, discussion and socialization guidelines, the size of the group, and the ability and ease of making connections with the group members. Any family support group needs leadership to handle member or scheduling conflicts and dominance in program planning and floor time. A good leader or group of officers should be able to provide quality programs while being aware of potential problems. To avoid many common problems, a group may have to set solid ground rules. Groups may also be formed to operate temporarily to reach short-term goals. Such groups usually follow a curriculum related to specific or requested topics. When the plan or curriculum is finished, the goal is met and then the group disbands.

Alabama's Early Intervention System

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

“I chose the group I am involved in because it was a Down Syndrome New Parent Group. I was very interested in their speakers and the information they could provide.”

Tina Conn, parent

“I chose to attend the family support group meetings because they were close to home.”

Lisa Wilson, parent

“The meetings for my support group are held on Saturday mornings and are very convenient.”

Michelle Norwood, parent

“We try to choose things that don’t require babysitting because it is difficult to arrange. If childcare is included, that is a plus. We also schedule things around school and work. It has to be convenient since we have two other children. We choose things that involve children like our son. We look for groups that have similar characteristics.”

Shannon Burch, parent

Ground Rules

Ground rules for support groups are important. These may be drawn up before the first meeting, but it is important that they be discussed and agreed upon by all participants at the first meeting and all subsequent meetings. Members should be able to suggest modifications or additions. This process not only establishes ground rules for the group; it also promotes ownership in the group by members and aids in the reestablishment of personal control.<sup>22</sup>

Alabama's Early Intervention System

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

Some suggested ground rules are:

1. Define the purpose of the group.
2. Everyone will have a chance to speak, but will be under no obligation to do so.
3. Everyone agrees that any and all information disclosed in this group is private and totally confidential.
4. All expressions of feeling are allowed.
5. Full names of non-participants should not be mentioned.
6. No personal information will be released by this group to any outside agency or individual without the written consent of the member.
7. Participants should feel free to get up and move around during the course of the meeting should they feel the need to do so.
8. Participants are encouraged to exchange phone numbers and call each other between meetings.
9. THIS IS YOUR GROUP! If any member has any suggestions or criticisms, he/she is encouraged to voice them to the group facilitator or staff.<sup>23</sup>

By-laws

By-laws are not ground rules. Ground rules are terms to follow for conducting the meeting and membership rights. By-laws are rules an organization agrees to live by to help things function smoothly and efficiently. Most groups have the same basic rules. Keep yours short, simple and to the point. By-laws state the name, purpose, affiliation (if any), membership and dues of the group. Officers, board of directors and nominating committees (if those apply) are named and their duties outlined. By-laws may be amended at any regular meeting of this group by an affirmative vote of two-thirds majority of the members present.<sup>24</sup>

“Our officers provide a slate of board members or persons available to serve as board members from the community. Our officers are members of PADS who want to serve our group. The officers can be voted on by the membership. Usually there is no objection. We are glad when someone wants to serve. Our by-laws are available on our web site, www.downsyndromealabama.org.”

Are There Existing Organizations?

How Do I Find Them?

Instead of starting your own support group, you might like to plug into an existing one. There are many places to look for family support groups on the local, state and national levels. Locally, you may talk with the special education staff at schools, talk to social service departments and therapy departments at hospitals, talk to vocational rehabilitation counselors, group homes, and check in the phone book under either the specific disability or in the yellow page under Disability Services. Many churches sponsor support groups. Support group information may be offered at the area Chamber of Commerce office or tourist information center. Newspapers sometimes provide a community calendar of events that will include support group meetings. State and national support groups may be found through local affiliate chapters, newspaper links and by searching the Internet for general or disability specific information. Clearinghouses such as NICHCY offer statewide and national listings of family support groups. Family Support America is a national resource organization that provides a mapping project to assist with locating family support groups on the local, state and national levels. If your child is in early intervention, ask your service coordinator to help you make it a priority on your IFSP.

“I found our support group in the Montgomery Parent’s Magazine.”

Shannon Burch, parent

“Other parents at the Bell Center told me about the group supported by PADS.”

Tina Conn, parent

How Do I Join?

When you have found a group whose goals and activities are similar to what you’d like to do, contact the group and ask how you would go about affiliating with it. If this group is a state or local affiliate of a national organization, ask how you join with the national office. Talk to representatives of the group about assistance they can offer in getting subscriptions to relevant publications and locating resources in your area<sup>25</sup>.

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

When considering membership in one or more family support groups, it is helpful to review your personal needs. Are you looking for moral support or advocacy training? Do you want to get to know other families who have a child like yours? Are you interested in hearing speakers on special education and disability topics? Are you interested in becoming involved in local decision-making processes for school and disability issues? Would you like to receive a newsletter on disability topics?<sup>26</sup>

Ask yourself what kind of “joiner” you are. Are you more comfortable with formal organizations or do you prefer less structure? Consider the types of groups around you and decide where you would feel most comfortable. Sometimes the best way to get involved with a new group of people is to volunteer to take an activity. By being a participant you will meet other members and learn more about the goals and functions of the organization.<sup>27</sup>

Even if your search does not result in a decision to affiliate with an existing organization, it will be useful to have contacts in the disability field with whom you can network.<sup>28</sup>

PEOPLE FIRST LANGUAGE

A commentary by Kathie Snow

Who are the so-called "handicapped" or "disabled"?

According to stereotypical perceptions, they are:

People who suffer from the tragedy of birth defects.
Paralegic heroes who struggle to become normal again.
Victims who fight to overcome their challenges.

Categorically, they are called retarded, autistic, blind,
deaf, learning disabled, etc., etc., etc., — ad naseum!

Who are they, really?

Moms and Dads. . . Sons and Daughters . . . Employees and Employers
Friends and Neighbors . . . Students and Teachers. . . Leaders and Followers
Scientists, Doctors, Actors, Presidents, and More
They are people.
They are people, first.

People with disabilities constitute our nation's largest minority group. It is also the most inclusive and most diverse: both genders, any sexual orientation, and all ages, religions, socioeconomic levels, and ethnicities are represented. Yet people who have been diagnosed with disabilities are all different from one another. The only thing they have in common is being on the receiving end of societal misunderstanding, prejudice, and discrimination. Furthermore, this largest minority group is the only one which any person can become part of, at any time! Some join at birth, others in the split second of an accident, through illness, or during the aging process. If and when it happens to you, will you have more in common with others who have disability diagnoses or with family, friends, and co-workers? How will you want to be described? And how will you want to be treated?

The Power of Language and Labels

Words are powerful. Old and inaccurate descriptors, and the inappropriate use of these descriptors, perpetuate negative stereotypes and reinforce an incredibly powerful attitudinal barrier. And this invisible, but potent, attitudinal barrier is the greatest obstacle facing individuals with disabilities. When we describe people by their medical diagnoses, we devalue and disrespect them as individuals. Do you want to be known primarily by your psoriasis, gynecological history, the warts on your behind, or any other condition?

If thought
corrupts language,
language can also
corrupt thought.
George Orwell

Worse, medical diagnoses are frequently used to define a person's potential and value! In the process, we crush people's hopes and dreams, and relegate them to the margins of society. If we know about (or see) a person's diagnosis, we (mistakenly) think we know something important about him, and we give great weight to this information, using it to determine how/where a person will be educated, what type of job he will/won't have, where/how he'll live, and more. A person's future may be determined—based on his diagnosis—by those with authority over him! Today, millions of children and adults with disability diagnoses are essentially "incarcerated" behind the walls of "special (segregated) places:" special ed classrooms, congregate living quarters, day programs, sheltered work environments, and more—all because of the diagnosis that's been assigned. When incorrectly used as a measure of a person's abilities or potential, medical diagnoses can ruin people's lives.

Inaccurate Descriptors

"Handicapped" is an archaic term (it's no longer used in any federal legislation) that evokes negative images of pity, fear, and more. The origin of the word is from an Old English bartering game in which the loser was left with his "hand in his cap" and was thought to be at a disadvantage. A legendary origin of the "H-word" refers to a person with a disability begging with his "cap in his hand." This antiquated, derogatory term perpetuates the stereotypical perception that people with disabilities make up one homogenous group of pitiful, needy people! Other people who share a certain characteristic are not all alike; similarly, individuals who happen to have disabilities are not alike. In fact, people who have disabilities are more like people who don't have disabilities than different!

"Handicapped" is often used to describe parking spaces, hotel rooms, restrooms, etc. But these generally provide access for people with physical or mobility needs---and they may provide no benefit for people with visual, hearing, or other conditions. This is one example of the

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

inaccuracy and misuse of the H-word as a generic descriptor. (The accurate term for modified parking spaces, hotel rooms, etc. is "accessible.")

"Disabled" is also not appropriate. Traffic reporters frequently say, "disabled vehicle." They once said, "stalled car." Sports reporters say, "the disabled list." They once said, "injured reserve." Other uses of this word today mean "broken/non-functioning." People with disabilities are not broken!

If a new toaster doesn't work, we say it's "defective" and return it. Shall we return babies with "birth defects"? The accurate and respectful descriptor is "congenital disability."

Many parents say, "I have a child with special needs." This term generates pity, as demonstrated by the, "Oh, I'm so sorry," response, a sad look, or a sympathetic pat on the arm. (Gag!) A person's needs aren't "special" to him—they're ordinary. I've never met an adult with a disability who wanted to be called "special." Let's learn from those with real experience, and stop inflicting this pity-laden descriptor on others.

"Suffers from," "afflicted with," "victim of," and similar descriptors are inaccurate, inappropriate, and archaic. A person simply "has" a condition, period!

What is a Disability?

Is there a universally-accepted definition of disability? No! First and foremost, a disability label is a medical diagnosis, which becomes a sociopolitical passport to services or legal status. Beyond that, the definition is up for grabs! What constitutes a disability depends on which service system is accessed. The "disability criteria" for early intervention is different from early childhood, which is different from vocational rehabilitation, which is different from special education, which is different from worker's compensation, and so on. Thus, "disability" is a social construct, created to identify those who may be entitled to services or legal protections because of certain characteristics related to a medical diagnosis.

Disability is Not the "Problem"

Because society tends to view disability as a "problem," this seems to be the #1 word used about people with disabilities. People without disabilities, however, don't spend a lot of time talking about their problems. They know this would promote an inaccurate perception of themselves, and it would also be counterproductive to creating a positive image. A person who wears glasses, for example, doesn't say, "I have a problem seeing." She says, "I wear [or need] glasses."

Alabama's Early Intervention System

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

What is routinely called a "problem" actually reflects a need. Thus, Susan doesn't "have a problem walking," she "needs/uses a wheelchair." Ryan doesn't "have behavior problems," he "needs behavior supports." Do you want to be known by your "problems" or by the multitude of positive characteristics which make you the unique individual you are? When will people without disabilities begin speaking about people with disabilities in the respectful way they speak about themselves?

Then there's the "something wrong" descriptor, as in "We knew there was something wrong when..." What must it feel like when a child hears his parents repeat this over and over and over again? How would you feel if those who are supposed to love and support you constantly talked about what's "wrong" with you? Let's stop talking this way!

The Real Problems are Attitudinal and Environmental Barriers

A change in attitude can change everything. If educators believed children with disabilities are boys and girls with the potential to learn, who need the same quality of education as their brothers and sisters, and who have a future in the adult world of work, we wouldn't have millions of children being segregated and undereducated in special ed classrooms.

The difference between the right word and the almost right word is the difference between lightning and the lightning bug.
Mark Twain

If employers believed adults with disabilities have (or could learn) valuable job skills, we wouldn't have an estimated (and shameful) 75 percent unemployment rate of people with disabilities. If merchants perceived people with disabilities as customers with money to spend, we wouldn't have so many inaccessible stores, theaters, restrooms, and more. If the service system identified people with disabilities as "customers," instead of "clients/consumers/recipients," perhaps it would begin to meet a person's real needs (like inclusion, friendships, etc.) instead of trying to remediate his "problems."

And if individuals with disabilities and family members saw themselves as first-class citizens who can and should be fully included in all areas of life, we might also focus on what's really important: living a Real Life (like people without disabilities) instead of a Special Life, under the authority of others in the system, which often results in the social isolation and physical segregation of the "disability welfare state."

A New Paradigm

“Disability is a natural part of the human experience...”

U.S. Developmental Disabilities/Bill of Rights Act

Alabama's Early Intervention System

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

Yes, disability is natural, and it can redefined as a "body part that works differently." A person with spina bifida has legs that work differently, a person with Down syndrome learns differently, and so forth. Yet the body parts of people without disabilities are also different. It's the way these differences affect person (or how a person is perceived) which qualifies him as eligible for services, entitlements, or legal protections, and this mandates the use of a disability descriptor in the service or legal system. One in five Americans is a person with a condition we call a disability!

A disability, like gender, ethnicity, and other traits, is simply one of many natural characteristics of being human. People can no more be defined by their medical conditions than others can be defined by their gender, ethnicity, religion, sexual orientation, or anything else!

In addition, a disability is often a consequence of the environment. Why are many children not diagnosed until they enter public school? Is it because physicians are ignorant or parents are "in denial"? Or is it because as toddlers, they were in environments that supported their learning styles? But once in public school, if a child's learning style doesn't mesh with an educator's teaching style, he's said to have a "disability." Why do we blame the child, label him, and segregate him in a special ed classroom? Why don't we modify the regular curriculum (per special ed law) to meet his individual needs?

When a person is in a welcoming, accessible environment, with the appropriate supports, accommodations, and tools, does he still have a disability? No! Disability is not a constant state. The medical diagnosis may be constant, but whether the condition represents a "disability" is more a consequence of the environment than what a person's body or mind can or cannot do.

Using People First Language is Crucial!

People First Language puts the person before the disability, and it describes what a person has, not who a person is.

Are you "myopic" or do you wear glasses?

Are you "cancerous" or do you have cancer?

Is a person "handicapped/disabled" or does she have a disability?

If people with disabilities are to be included in all aspects of society, and if they're to be respected and valued as our fellow citizens, we must stop using language that sets them apart and devalues them.

Children with disabilities are children, first. The only labels they need are their names! Parents must not talk about their children using the medical terms used by professionals. Educators must not use terms like "sped kids," "LD students," and other demeaning descriptors. Children in school are students and some receive special ed services.

Alabama's Early Intervention System

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

Adults with disabilities are adults, first. The only labels they need are their names! They must not talk about themselves using professional lingo. Service providers must not use terms like "MR client," "quads," and other diagnostic terms.

The use of disability descriptors is appropriate only in the service system (at those ubiquitous "I" team meetings) and in medical or legal settings. Medical labels have no place—and they should be irrelevant—within families, among friends, and in the community.

We often use a diagnosis to convey information, as when a parent says, "My child has Down syndrome," hoping others will realize her child needs certain accommodations or supports. But the outcome of sharing the diagnosis can be less than desirable! A diagnosis can scare people, generate pity, and/or set up exclusion ("We can't handle people like that..."). In these circumstances, and when it's appropriate, we can simply describe the person's needs in a respectful, dignified manner, and omit the diagnosis.

I use your People First Language article in my university courses (graduate and undergraduate). It's extremely well-written, clear, and user-friendly. Thanks for providing and sharing all your wonderful information.

*Julia Scherba deValenzuela, Ph.D.
Assistant Professor, Special Education
University of New Mexico*

Besides, the diagnosis is nobody's business! Have individuals with disabilities given us permission to share their personal information with others? If not, how dare we violate their trust! Do you routinely tell every Tom, Dick, and Harry about the boil on your spouse's behind? (I hope not!) And too many of us talk about people with disabilities in front of them, as if they're not there. We must stop this demeaning practice!

Attitudes and language changed as a result of the Civil Rights and Women's Movements. The Disability Rights Movement is following in those important footsteps, and similar changes are occurring.

My son, Benjamin, is 18 years old. More important than his diagnosis are his interests, strengths, and dreams. He loves history, burned fish sticks, classic rock, and writing movie reviews—and he's great at mimicking actors and politicians! He's earned two karate belts, taken drama classes, and performed in five children's theater productions. Benj is attending college and wants to be a film critic. He has blonde hair, blue eyes, and cerebral palsy. His diagnosis is only one of many

Alabama's Early Intervention System

www.rehab.state.al.us

Parent Power

characteristics of his whole persona. He is not his disability. His potential cannot be predicted by his diagnosis.

When I meet new people, I don't disclose that I'll never be a prima ballerina. I focus on my strengths, not on what I cannot do. Don't you do the same? So when speaking about my son, I don't say, "Benj can't write with a pencil." I say, "Benj writes on a computer." I don't say, "He can't walk." I say, "He uses a power chair." It's a simple, but vitally important, matter of perspective. If I want others to know what a great young man he is—more importantly, if I want him to know what a great young man I think he is—I must use positive and accurate descriptors that portray him as a whole, real, wonderful person, instead of as a collection of "defects," "problems," or "body parts."

A person's self-image is strongly tied to the words used to describe him. For generations, people with disabilities have been described by negative, stereotypical words which have created harmful, mythical perceptions. We must stop believing (and perpetuating) the myths—the lies—of labels. We must believe children and adults who have been diagnosed with conditions called "disabilities" are unique individuals with unlimited potential, just like all Americans.

People First Language isn't about being "politically correct." It is, instead, about good manners and respect (and it was begun by individuals who said, "We are not our disabilities!"). We have the power to create a new paradigm of disability. In doing so, we'll change the lives of children and adults who have disability diagnoses—and we'll also change ourselves and our world.

*Isn't it time to make this change?
If not now, when? If not you, who?*

*People First Language is right.
Just do it—NOW!*

Examples of People First Language

Say:

People with disabilities.
He has a cognitive disability (diagnosis).
She has autism (or a diagnosis of...).
He has Down syndrome (or a diagnosis of...)
She has a learning disability (diagnosis).
He has a physical disability (diagnosis).
She's of short stature/she's a little person.
He has a mental health diagnosis.
She uses a wheelchair/mobility chair.
He receives special ed services.
She has a developmental delay.
Children without disabilities.
Communicates with her eyes/device/etc.
Customer
Congenital disability
Brain injury
Accessible parking, hotel room, etc.
She needs . . . or she uses . . .

Instead of:

The handicapped or disabled.
He's mentally retarded.
She's autistic.
He's Down's; a Down's person.
She's learning disabled.
He's a quadriplegic/is crippled.
She's a dwarf/midget.
He's emotionally disturbed/mentally ill.
She's confined to/is wheelchair bound.
He's in special ed.
She's developmentally delayed.
Normal or healthy children.
Is non-verbal.
Client, consumer, recipient, etc.
Birth defect
Brain damaged
Handicapped parking, hotel room, etc.
She has problems/special needs.

This manual, Parent Power, has been developed by the Family Support Project (FSP) under the direction of Karen Williams, FSP Coordinator.

Funding for this project was provided by Alabama's Early Intervention System (AEIS), a division of the Alabama Department of Rehabilitation Services (ADRS).

Alabama's Early Intervention System coordinates a statewide system of services and supports for infants and toddlers younger than 3 years old with developmental delays and their families. With the assistance of eight other state agencies working through an Interagency Coordinating Council (ICC), district staff and community EI programs, AEIS provides a coordinated, family-focused system of services which depends upon the involvement of parents and other family members in planning, development and evaluation.

Infants and toddlers may be referred to AEIS by calling the toll-free
